Inspirational Quotes. During the 9th and 10th centuries, continually threatened by Viking invasions France became a very decentralised state: the nobility's titles and lands became hereditary, and the authority of the king became more religious than secular and thus was less effective and constantly challenged by powerful noblemen.

One of the things I do that my editors are not terribly fond of is to lightly admit I have only heard of a couple of mercy fucks--and each tended to turn out badly for one or more parties involved, so I can't see that I'd ever do it.
